Norms and Transfer Taxes, in CONTROVERSIES IN TAX LAW: A MATTER OF PERSPECTIVE (Anthony Infanti, editor) (Ashgate 2015)

Professor Avlana Eisenberg’s article, Expressive Enforcement, 61 UCLA L. Rev. 858 (2014), uses enforcement of hate crimes to challenge conventional understandings of the messaging function of lawmaking. The results from her study – the first multi-state qualitative empirical study of hate crime prosecution – help to explain a paradox. She finds that in archetypal hate crime cases involving animus directed at a victim’s core identity features, prosecutors may decline to include hate crime charges because of statutory incentives, difficulty of proving motive, and concerns about jury reaction.

In A Dynamic Theory of Judicial Role, 55 Boston College Law Review 1501 (2014), Professor David Landau critically examines the democracy-improving model of judicial review as a justification for judicial activism in fragile democracies. The article argues that more must be done to assess the plausibility and effectiveness of judicial action to improve such democracies. It also suggests, as a useful empirical agenda, that scholars investigate the effects of different strategies of judicial activism on the evolution of different kinds of dysfunctional political institutions.

In his article, A House Divided: When State and Lower Federal Courts Disagree on Federal Constitutional Rights, 90 Notre Dame Law Review 235 (2014), Professor Wayne Logan provides the first in-depth examination of intra-state federal constitutional variation, which results from state and lower federal courts’ concurrent authority to interpret the Constitution. The article urges Congress to allow states to certify disputed questions to the U.S. Supreme Court, as lower federal courts currently can.

Civil Remedies (with E. Hammond), in Global Climate Change and U.S. Law (Michael B. Gerrard, editor) (2d ed., American Bar Association 2014)

Professor Dave Markell’s article, A Holistic View of Agency Enforcement (with Rob Glicksman), 93 North Carolina Law Review 1 (2014), seeks to fill a gap in the law review literature by holistically evaluating administrative enforcement and compliance.
In his award-winning article, Abandoned Criminal Attempts: An Economic Analysis, Alabama Law Review (forthcoming 2015), Professor Murat Mungan formalizes a trade-off between marginal and ex-ante deterrence by using standard economic analysis. He suggests, contrary to the principles encapsulated in most existing law, that abandoned criminal attempts ought to be punished less severely than completed attempts whether the perpetrator abandoned the attempt because of fear of getting caught rather than a change of heart.

Professor Garrick Pursley’s article, Dormancy, 100 Georgetown Law Journal 497 (2012), provides a new theoretical account of the historically controversial dormant Commerce Clause, dormant Admiralty Clause, and dormant foreign affairs powers doctrines as implementing a single, simple constitutional preclusion of state action that undermines the stability of the constitutional system.

Federalism and the Tug of War Within (Oxford University Press 2012)

Environmental Federalism’s Tug of War Within, in The Law and Policy of Environmental Federalism: A Comparative Analysis (Kalyani Robins, editor) (Edward Elgar 2015)
Professor Erin Ryan’s book, FEDERALISM AND THE TUG OF WAR WITHIN (Oxford University Press 2012), explores how constitutional interpreters reconcile the competing values that underpin American federalism, with real consequences for governance that require local and national collaboration. Drawing examples from Hurricane Katrina, climate governance, and health care reform, Ryan demonstrates how the Supreme Court’s federalism jurisprudence can inhibit effective inter-jurisdictional governance by failing to navigate the tensions within federalism itself.

Negotiating Federalism Past the Zero–Sum Game, 38 Admin. & Regulatory L. News 4 (Fall 2012)
Professor Mark Seidenfeld’s article, A Process Failure Theory of Statutory Interpretation, 56 William & Mary Law Review 467 (2014), presents a theory of statutory interpretation and considers several types of legislative process failures that warrant courts accommodating the legislative approach to attaching meaning to statutes.
In his article, Testing Tribe’s Triangle: Juries, Hearsay, and Psychological Distance, 103 Georgetown Law Journal 879 (2015), Professor Justin Sevier presents the results of the first empirical examination of the testimonial triangle, which conceptualizes the objections to hearsay evidence at common law. The article suggests that, consistent with behavioral science research on implicit goal activation and psychological distance, jurors are attuned to the testimonial infirmities that lurk beneath hearsay evidence and discount the evidence defensibly.

In Regulatory Islands, 89 New York University Law Review 1661 (2014), Professor Hannah Wiseman explores the problem of “regulatory islands,” which occur when state and local governments fail to share data from their regulatory experimentation. She analyzes the public choice, political economy and resource-based dynamics that create regulatory islands, and argues that the federal government is in the best position to produce and synthesize regulatory information to prevent their creation.
